OAKWOOD COLLEGE
VOLUME 17 HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA

During the past seventy years the world has made rapid strides toward the development of our modern age culture. In order to facilitate this progress we have witnessed the growth and development of the great American system of education. Beginning with the basic elements of learning in the one room schools of colonial and post revolutionary America, our present-day system of primary, secondary and college level schools has evolved.

Oakwood has become a part of this ever-growing, ever-expanding system. We here at Oakwood are now endeavoring, as those before us have endeavored, to assure God's people of the ability to remain in the proper perspective with respect to the program of our Lord and the aim of securing only the best education possible.

G. E. Peters Hall

There is a great deal of room for improvement here. And yet we cannot deny that the Oakwoodite of today has a great deal to be thankful for. Oakwood is growing, building and expanding. Things here are a great distance away from the condition they were in at the inception of the school.

We hope that as you look through the following pages you will see in them a reflection of the progress being made here. We the Acorn staff of 1966 have had the pleasure of compiling this book in its entirety and we wish to thank all those individuals who cooperated so willingly with us.

It is the desire of our staff that you will see in this book a glimpse of the blessings we here at Oakwood enjoy.

CAMPUS SCENES

Everybody understands . . . or do they?

Oh well! Tweety is studying, or sleeping.

Maybe Lloyd explains better than Dr. Cooper, eh Shirley?

Was it that bad, Brad??

Does the cafeteria ever open on time,
Mallum?

I guess she's not there Foster.

Now can you read it Mary?

Jones & Johnson Incorporated

I've got spurs that jingle, jangle, jingle.

Does she or doesn't she? only her hair dresser knows for sure.

I never would have believed that this is the same place grandma talked about.

Which way did they go Laverne?
Who's leading who? Sandra

The Great Thinker ...

My name is Wes—, but I wasn't in that mess.

Now Suzie, you can take better notes than that!

You say this will work on Walter?

I'd bet Ray Charles would sound better.

Everyone is here, except PAW.

Only another hour, and then he'll be here.

Move Laverne! Dr. Dykes told me never to be late again.

Now let's see. I before E except after C and . . .

Dig it folks. Louis Armstrong Jr. and "Oh Mary, don't you weep."

Gee! An educated shaggy dog.

Romeo, my Romeo! Wherefore art thou my Romeo?

I guess we hurt her feelings, Erma.

I didn't want any mail anyway!

I told you he was my man, Gloria!

Well Mom Frazier, it's like this . . .

It's time for a change of scenery.

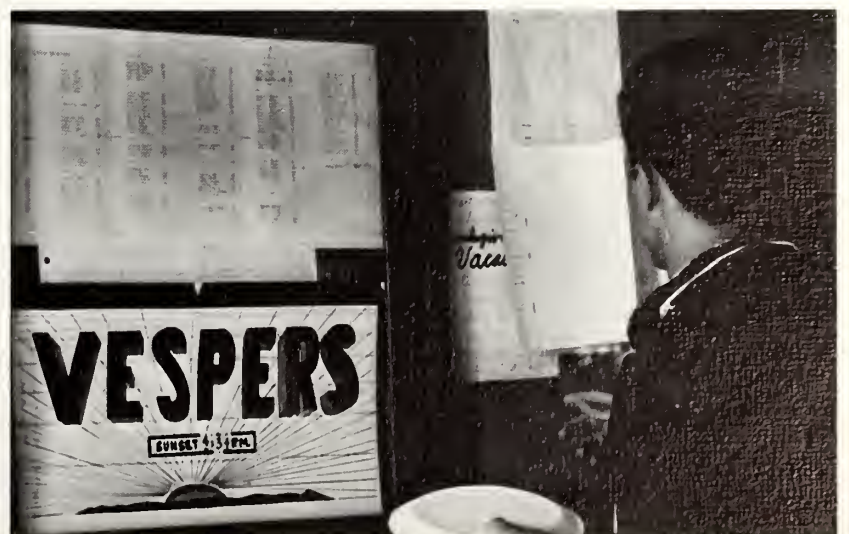

Whadda ya' say, Jerry boy?

I've got a program for you, Dean!

Think I'll ask for a raise.

Oh well! Looks like she forgot you again Doug.

... and your major is Business?!!

Now that quiet hour is over ...

It sounded better coming from Mama.

King Brad, and his knights of the Square Table

Aren't you glad you use Dial?

And they said love was wonderful!

But I like the girl, Richard!

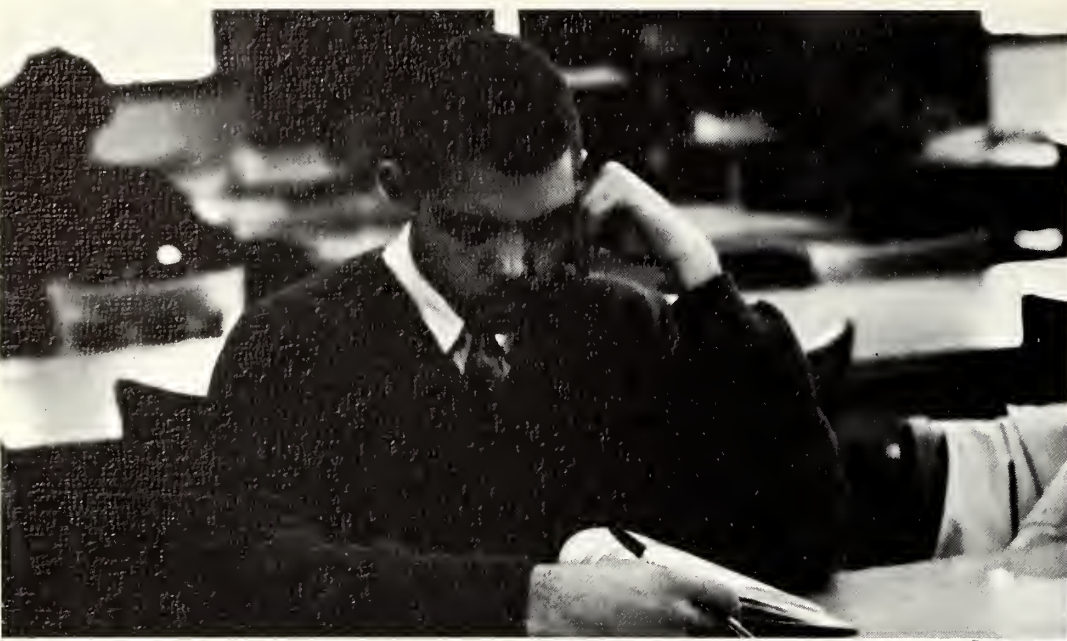

If only laziness were a virtue!

Actually, Freddie, you should come more than twice a year.

Trevor Baker, the "Trouble Maker," has trouble.

Wake up Wendell, it's 9:25 p.m.

Dear Alonzo, . . .

There really is a time and place for everything.

Any time next week Julia!

Smile, you're on Candid Camera.

I'll just lie down here for a minute and ... ho hum ...

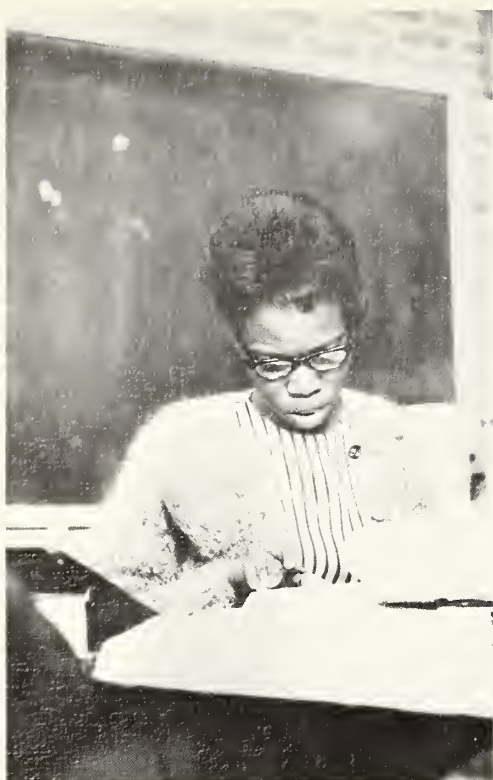

The test starts in twenty minutes.

Do I have one of these too?

I don't believe it!

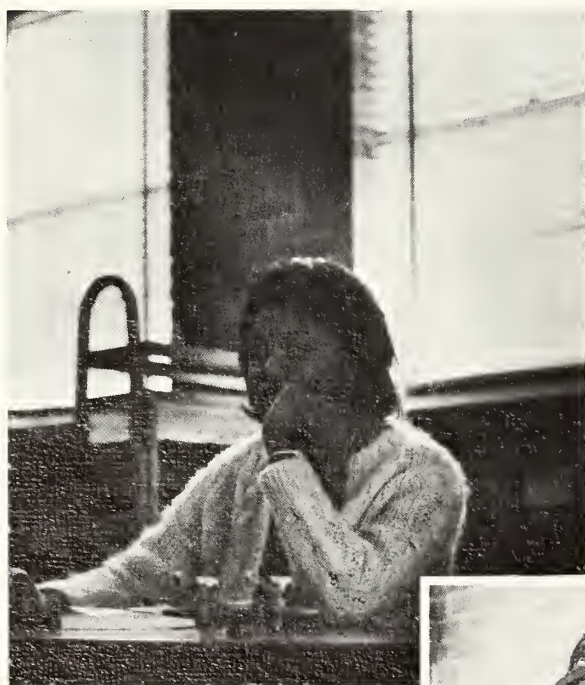

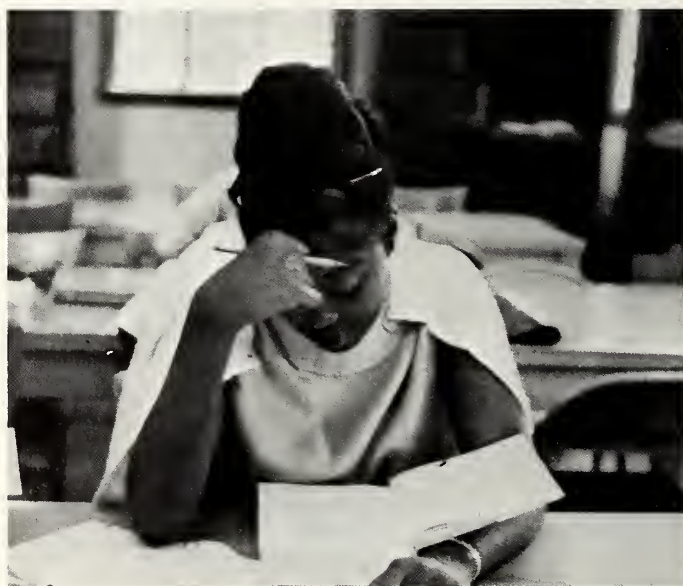

How do you spell "Deoxyribonucleic acid"?

Could this be . . . Batman and Robin?!!

Sharon? Oh, Sharon? Class is over.

Who me study? Naw, don't worry, I'm just posing.

Oh, if—only knew!

The Dedication

IN MEMORY OF . . .

. . . all those who in the course of the existence of Oakwood significantly contributed to its' development into the institution of distinction which it is today.

To our many faculty members, past and present, we the students wish to lift our voices in praise and appreciation for the invaluable benefits we are now receiving from your conscientious interest in our school. We must therefore pause at this time to express our gratitude to all those who have contributed greatly and particularly to those whose contributions might not seem so obvious in their value to our spiritual and educational edification.

We must also dedicate this book in part to those under whose administrative guidance Oakwood has been able to grow and expand during the past seventy years. These officials who have occupied the leading positions in our campus affairs are herein acknowledged for their many and variegated contributions to the perpetuation of such a fine college as Oakwood is today. We know that without the willingness and self-sacrifice of each one of you we would not be able to enjoy the wholesome fellowship and communion with God and our fellow students which is now considered a major facet of the Oakwood tradition. We wish to memorialize our thanks to you also.

Finally and most fittingly we dedicate this book to the memory of all the students who in the past seventy years have come and gone through the cloistered halls of learning here at our beloved institution. To these students do we owe the greatest of debts for without their loyalty to the principles set forth here, our present efforts would surely be of little avail. Upon their shoulders has rested the mantle of Oakwood's destiny. By their performance here has the survival or failure of the school depended to a great extent. Their willingness to accept the challenge of keeping the standard of Oakwood high from year to year has been of vital importance in years past. We graciously salute them for their valor and their faithfulness. Furthermore, we accept in this seventieth year the mantle which is handed to us and shall endeavor to wear it with dignity.

PRESIDENT A. V. PINKNEY

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Not many schools have been blest with a rich spiritual background like that of Oakwood College. Founded in 1896, Oakwood began with the expressly enunciated approval of the Lord. Mrs. Ellen G. White, the handmaiden of the Lord, was inspired to select the site for the location of our school.

Oakwood Manual Training School was especially designed to give training to the head, heart and hands of all who enrolled. The program was faithfully carried out in those early days. As a result, many young men and women who received their basic instruction here were qualified to accept the call for service.

Through the years growth and development have changed Oakwood Manual Training School into Oakwood College. Today workers that have passed through Oakwood are serving in denominational positions in America and other places throughout the world. It is worthy of note that in evangelism those who have been graduated from Oakwood are highest in the work of garnering "living sheaves" for God.

Our students in the teaching fields are afforded a rare privilege here at Oakwood. They have the opportunity to gain valuable teaching experience prior to their entrance into their chosen fields. As a result, many of them are selected to fill vacancies in the field long before they complete their course work. In the fields of business and the secretarial sciences, for example, our students are often recruited as early as their junior year. Many of them give their talent and efficiency to government service jobs. Many others are operating in denominational positions. The preparation of workers for the denomination is the school's prime objective.

As we enter the seventieth year of Oakwood's existence, there is much evidence of the progress of this institution. It is fully accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, it has been accepted by the Board of Regents as a four year liberal arts college, and it is the thirty-third accredited institution included as a recipient of funds from the United Negro College Fund.

Through the years Oakwood has grown in many ways. The enrollment at present is five hundred. We appreciate the support of the Regional Conferences, the financial assistance of the General Conference, and the firm backing of parents, friends, and benefactors.

. . . From this table came many of the momentous decisions which have helped to make Oakwood what it is today. This view of our President's office gives rise to the thoughts of the amount of progress that has really been made here in the past seventy years. On numerous occasions the various administrative committees have met around this table. The many hours which they have spent here has resulted in the school which we are now a part of. As we look toward the future, it is from the decisions made around this table that we must endeavor to take heart and catch a glimpse of the vision which will lead Oakwood on to higher and ever higher ground.

The student body this year has proven to be one which produced many memorable moments. The fun, the frolic as well as the sweat and possibly some few tears that made 1965-1966 school year what it was, will linger in the memories of us all.

It was truly another wonderful year to spend here in the shadows of the oaks.

United Student Movement

The United Student Movement of Oakwood College for the 1965-1966 school year is pictured here. The U.S.M. highlighted its activities this year by presenting a series of television programs once each month which focused on the students of Oakwood. The many talents and skills of the student body provided a vast storehouse to draw upon in order to present interesting programs each month.

The U.S.M. also pioneered another extensive venture. They began the building of a park on the campus. It is not yet finished but it is desired that students in future years will take up the work until it reaches completion.

Standing (l to r), are Edward Cartwright, Cleo Willis, Reuben Taylor, Isaac Fourdjour, and Wendell Nelson. Roger Wardell served as President and the Vice-President was Harvey Holland.

This year the Men's Club sponsored a fun festival. It was quite a delightful affair and all who attended were glad they had planned to do so.

The Epsilon Sigma Phi is the official dormitory organization which includes in its membership all college men. Through the years of its existence it has made significant contributions to campus life in past years and will continue to do so in the future.
